

Mangroves are trees found in warm climates near salty water. Mangroves are valuable because they filter pollution in the water. They prevent erosion by anchoring soil with their roots. Many birds find shelter in their branches. Fallen decayed leaves (detritus) of mangroves are an important food for many animals, including zooplankton and fish.